Subject: An independent and effective ombudsperson for responsible enterprise

Dear Minister Ng,

As Catholic leaders from dioceses across Canada, as well as Catholic organizations, religious congregations, and communities from across Canada, we are writing today to urge you to fulfill the promise of your government to ensure that the Canadian Ombudsperson for Responsible Enterprise (CORE) has the power to investigate complaints, including the power to compel documents and testimony.

For over fifteen years, Catholic leaders, organizations, and communities have joined other concerned Canadians and affected communities in the Global South to call for rules to regulate Canadian businesses overseas. Many of us have been working for many years defending the human rights of communities affected by the activities of natural resource extraction companies around the world, and we hear their cry for help. The voluntary measures that are currently in place have not been effective at preventing human rights and environmental abuses, nor at providing access to justice when abuses have taken place.

Pope Francis has emphasized over and over that the human rights of communities and the environment must be protected. As Pope Francis states in his encyclical Laudato Si', "a true ecological approach always becomes a social approach; it must integrate questions of justice in debates on the environment, so as to hear both the cry of the earth and the cry of the poor" (49).

For over a decade, Canadians have been asking the government to create rules for Canadian businesses operating overseas. In 2009, over 500,000 postcards were sent to members of Parliament to call for accountability for Canadian mining companies engaged in abuses overseas. Then, in 2014, over 80,000 signed action cards calling for an ombudsperson for the overseas extractive sector were delivered to MPs at a rally on Parliament Hill. This was part of the Development and Peace-Caritas Canada Voice for Justice campaign, and the Canadian Network for Corporate Accountability's Open for Justice campaign. In 2017, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops sent a letter to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to express concern over the environmental degradation and human rights violations caused by Canadian extractive companies operating in Latin America. The letter included recommendations for action, one of which was the creation of an independent ombudsperson with the power to independently investigate complaints. That letter followed one sent in 2016 to Prime Minister Trudeau that was signed by over 200 Latin American organizations, many of them Catholic, asking for greater oversight of Canadian extractive companies by the Canadian government.

As you can imagine, we were greatly encouraged, in January 2018, when the Government of Canada announced the creation of an independent ombudsperson's office to investigate allegations of abuse, with the mandate and tools needed to be effective. As recently as September 2019, former international trade minister Jim Carr indicated that he had asked his officials to begin the work required to pursue "a stand-alone legal framework for the office, including stipulating its powers to compel documents, witnesses, and other key testimony." However, since the federal election over a year ago, the CORE has still not been given the powers needed to be effective, even though Sheri Meyerhoffer has publicly agreed that the power to compel documents would ensure fair investigations.

The CORE has announced that it will soon be open to receiving complaints, but it still does not have the basic minimum powers required to ensure that it fulfils its mission to make Canadian companies accountable for their activities overseas. The CORE could suffer the same fate as its predecessor, the Extractive Sector CSR Counsellor, which also did not have the power to do independent investigations, and was eventually closed down. We have direct knowledge of communities living in poverty while defending their land, water, health, livelihoods and lives against the actions of multinational corporations. An impartial and fair process needs to be ensured, in order to address the dramatic power imbalance between the stakeholders.

Acting on this promise would ensure that Canada would uphold its international obligations, including the Sustainable Development Goals and the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. We urge you to fulfill your government's promises and make the new Canadian Ombudsperson for Responsible Enterprise (CORE) independent, and provide the CORE with the power to compel documents and testimony, so it can effectively investigate human rights abuse allegations linked to Canadian corporations operating overseas.

As faith leaders, it would be our pleasure to meet with you as soon as possible to discuss this urgent demand by thousands of Canadians, as well as hundreds of faith-based organizations and civil society groups across Canada and around the world. In order to arrange this meeting, please contact Kelly Di Domenico at kdidomenico@devp.org.

Yours sincerely,
